INTRODACTION

World practice knows a lot of examples of the functioning of state bodies, which represent the powers of executive and representative bodies of power, bodies of local self-government and have a military management organization. But the main, distinctive feature of their formation, functioning and termination of activity is a certain legal regime fixed at the constitutional level, provided that the implementation of the powers of the said bodies is carried out.

At the same time, in international legal practice, extraordinary legal regimes, in which the functioning of military civilian administrations is carried out, is quite common, which is a certain legislative institution aimed at establishing law and order, security and life of the population into a specific administrative-territorial unit.

We must state that international relations are characterized by extraordinary diversity and complexity. Among the range of problem issues that arise in the relations of many countries, there are various territorial disputes that sometimes arise in violent armed conflicts that take dozens and hundreds of thousands of human lives, cause numerous destruction of settlements, damage to communications, etc.

Thus, the stability of the development of the world community is continuously undermined by numerous international conflicts, a significant number of which is a category of territorial disputes. The aggression against Ukraine has witnessed a crisis of a modern system of international security.
